Conditions Make It Easy To Talk Optimistically

It was not so much more than a year ago that to gather material for a story that gave a cheerfully rosyate bird's-eye view of business was a real achievement. Conditions did not seem optimistic at all; not being able to talk optimistically, bankers and business men preferred not to talk at all, so there you were.

It's all a state of mind, everybody said. Think good times and you'll have good times. There were a few enthusiastic souls who believed in that creed so thoroughly that they not only talked optimism but also wrote optimistic articles. In what seemed to be discouraging signs of the times, a prophet is not without honor—etc. ad infinitum—and now comes the time when they reap the harvest of their determined cheerfulness and refusal to be downhearted. For the banker who a year, possibly months, ago was faced with a wall of silence, possible apprehension as to the ultimate end towards which the country was journeying, having an anxious eye on what seemed to be a preponderance of valleys ahead, has come now to the upturn where he can not only look behind him at the depressions well in the rear but can talk happily about almost anything under the sun pertaining to business and man-

Meanwhile improved general conditions locally are repeated in other parts of the country according to reports brought home by Tulsa delegates to national conventions in various parts of the United States.

Business activity characterized forward movements elsewhere, especially in the coast cities but in some of them it seems to be of such dimensions as here in Tulsa, was the report brought home by delegates from the realtors' national convention in San Francisco. Even while the realtors were on their long, long delegation working hard to secure the nomination of the 1922 Realtor meet and while no decision was made as to where the convention will be held two years from now, Tulsa wants it and the real estate exchange is looking toward that possible event in agitating a train terminal that would be in some measure indicative of the progressiveness and growth of the wonder city.

No pessimism at Milwaukee where the advertising men gathered last week, according to delegates who attended the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World convention there. Everybody was cheerful over what is and what is going to be, everybody talking good business and more business, everybody looking forward to a new era of prosperity that has already dawned.

So Tulsa, while she may be a little bit of a "new girl" is merely fugitive along with the general procession in this business march.

READY AUTO TRAILER EXPLAINS FACTORY AIDS.

In a monthly letter, the first of a series sent out to the friends and patrons of the Ready Auto Truck & Trailer Co., Inc., the following explanation of factory requisites, standards, etc., is made:

The work actually accomplished by a factory is more interesting than the story of its beginning, and the basis through which it has passed to realize ambitions in actual production are but sidebar on the enterprise. With this statement as a sort of text it is planned to bring out clearly the reasons for the existence of this industrial enterprise.

The building of truck bodies, trailers and the many auxiliaries attached or separately, calls forth every force and skill that the manufacturing company can command. Trucks are produced by most persons buying the products of that company—it is assumed that the article purchased is made on the best scientific principles known to the management.
